AUBURN CHEATS

THWUGA knows the reason for the Dawgs' mysterious loss to Auburn. It involves money, whores and more. Page 26

SHINY OBJECT CONFUSING

A shiny, round, flat piece of metal has made its way to U[sic]GA. There is rampant speculation to its use and meaning. Page 17

by the numbers

The number of SEC Championship games Georgia has qualified for in football this year. This is not the first time everyone thought the team would be there, and it is not the last time that the team will not live up to expectations. This also happens to be the number of classes, on average, the Georgia football team attends weekly.

1

The number of fans at U[sic]GA's first basketball game last, well, no one has confirmed the game was played. The alleged fan, the mother of a new player, fell asleep before she saw any of the action and woke up when the women's basketball game began what she describes as "several days later." She has not been able to find her son for comment, but received a letter stating he may now be playing Halo II instead of basketball.

The number of points awarded for a two-point shot in basketball. It has been rumored that this year's Fundamentals of Basketball test will have only one question, as the previous year's test was called "too long" and "too difficult" by many of the athletes in the class. Just a hint, this year's question will be, "How many points are awarded for a two-point shot?" The answer is two. It has been rumored that a swimming and diving athlete can read and would be willing to pass this knowledge on to the basketball and football teams.

The test referenced in the previous question will be multiple choice. Two, which will be the answer to the question, will be choice number "C." Assistant Coach UGA VI commented "Rruffff!" No one knows what this means, but it could be very important.

4

The number that comes immediately after C is especially important this year. Just imagine how tough it would be to count from C to five without four. In other news, an athlete remembered a historical speech with the number four involved. "I remembered when I was walking to class the other day that some famous guy, either Georgia Washington or somebody like that, said something about four scores. I scored four times last night, but then my sister told me I had to leave," said an anonymous starting quarterback.

Why can't we play in the Dome, too?

By Jack N. Offagen
Spurts are good

The Dawgs have come to the big city of Atlanta for the second consecutive weekend for a football game. Well, a few tractors broke down on the way back from last weekend's loss, so some of the team never left.

"I sold my tractor, my trailer and my tractor trailer just to get a ticket."

Otis from Mayberry
Dawgs fan

"I don't know what the hell they're doing on the field," said Auburn fan James John.

Apparently, someone forgot to tell UGA that they did not qualify for the SEC Championship game this weekend.

"It's on the schedule they handed out, right here, SEC Championship Game, Atlanta, and they taught us how to read these schedules at the Agricollege, have to know them to fertilize the grass c'rectly, y'understand?" said a Georgia enthusiast who identified herself as "IloveDavidGreene."

Tennessee and Auburn had to do

By Anita Hardwon / TOO MUCH?

The Dawgs have arrived at the SEC Championship game. Unfortunately, nobody told the team that they are not playing in the game. Auburn and Tennessee players quickly resolved the problem.

something all too familiar to them to get the Dawgs off the field.

"We whupped them once, and we just had to do it again, literally, they were too dumb to understand that three teams can't play the game," said Auburn star Bentley Williams.

Georgia fans booed loudly when the SEC announced that their beloved Dawgs would not play.

"I sold my tractor, my trailer and my tractor trailer just to get a ticket for this here Dawgs game," Otis from Mayberry said.

"Coach had said we was going to Atlanta to the Dome, no matter how we got there," said a member of the Dawgs' team.

Realizing the cost of the trip, another U[sic]GA player thought. This may be the first time this has ever happened.

"Well, I had heard it's expensive, but I knew we was going to the game, so I went ahead and sold my SEC Championship ring for this year, ya heard?" Dan Romanian said.

The buyer of the item, a die-hard Dawgs fan, still believes the ring is coming.

"Folks be sayin' I'm dumb as a Dawg, but I'm gettin' another ring," Herschel Walker said.

Highly touted goat walks on

By I. P. Aften
Spurts out of control

By Juan Habonya / MAN OF MANY TALENTS

Bill E. Goat may not seem imposing, but he has drawn comparison's to many well-known players across the country. He is one of six walk-ons that will be leading U[sic]GA's basketball team.

With a somewhat disappointing football season coming to an end, Georgia fans have very little to lift their spirits.

Many believe that this is not likely to change with the beginning of another year of basketball.

Some may think that the Dawgs B-Ball team actually looks quite horrendous on the eve of the season. They have very few scholarship players and a large group of walk-ons. The program certainly does have some problems.

However, all the problems are the NCAA's fault anyway. They should never have made the Dawgs get rid of their old coach Jim Harrick. He knew how to recruit the old-school way...with money and free grades. U[sic]GA simply can't compete if they aren't allowed to do things the right way.

In a recent interview, Coach Dennis Felton said, "Yeah, we're probably gonna suck real bad."

This may seem like the kiss of death from your own coach, but many, including this reporter are more optimistic.

Although only about half the current team is on scholarship, it's all right because that extra money can be used to buy a star football player a new SUV. His old one is getting kind of beat-up from goin' muddin' too much.

See Goat, page 27

by the letters

A

Alphabets always seem to start with the letter A. Amazingly over one player on athletic scholarship can identify this as a letter. A is also the grade that every athlete received for Fundamentals of Football. A senior starter seemed surprised at this news. "I never went to class, but this A's a pretty good surprise for me," an anonymous David Pollack said.

B

Basketball. In a scrimmage yesterdays, the basketball teams played boys against girls. The girls won the game by "a score too big for anybody to count," although the boys did not score. The boys did hit a layup in halftime drills, though. This was progress as Coach Felton had yet to find a player of his own to demonstrate how to earn points for the team.

4 the record, we know that four is not a letter, it's a punctuation. 4ft may be what the basketball team decides to do in lieu of playing an entire schedule this season.

Goat

Also, as the football team has no rings to sell from an SEC Championship game this year, funding for essentials for the football program such as steaks, alcohol and promiscuous women looked to be tight. This is no longer a problem with the surplus of hoops funds.

Besides, the Dawgs don't need real players. The six new walk-ons look fantastic.

One walk-on from North Georgia is a goat named Bill E. Goat. Although fans might be skeptical about the academic qualifications of this goat because he was home-schooled, be assured that the U[sic]GA athletic department has taken care of any inconsistencies in his transcript. He should have no problems fitting right in with the other athletes.

Bill E. Goat also has some basketball ability. His skill set is similar to that of Dook guard J.J. Reddick.

They both shoot the ball well while showing little else in other facets of the game. Also, like Reddick Billy is blindly loved by Dick Vitale. In the current issue of ESPN the Magazine, goat-boy, as his teammates have begun to call him, was picked as one of the diaper-dandies to watch in the coming season.

In a related story, goat-boy was actually recruited by Coach Mike Kryzewskiykqzixbmzi of Dook as a possible heir-apparent to Reddick.

It is difficult to understand why he would turn down a scholarship at Dook to walk on the team down in Athens. Perhaps he heard about "Coaching Principles and Strategies of Basketball", a fantastic class that is regularly offered at U[sic]GA.

When asked about his startling decision, the goat said, "BAAAAAHHHHH. H H H H . " Roughly translated, that means, "Baaaaahhhh." This certainly sheds some light on the subject.

The other five walk-ons have yet to be determined. "I can tell you this, if they can walk, then they're going to be on," said Felton.

Tryouts will be held continuously until these students can be found. It is preferred that each applicant be willing to receive a degree in four years, regardless of education background.

This should be a fun team to watch. The Dawgs start the regular season this week with games against Western Kentucky and Nevada. Nevada lost its star player, which is very lucky for the Dawgs.

These games should be good tune-ups. The team can learn how to deal with crushing defeat before they travel to Atlanta to face that Tech school next month, a game which could result in U[sic]GA being shutout for the first time in the history of their program.

Season tickets are on sale for all of the Dawgs games this year. The rumor is that several Kentucky fans have already bought these to follow their team, but none have been bought by UGA fans who seem to have forgotten that a basketball team even exists.

Hoops star found and lost

By Bye

I love spurts

Dennis Felton thought he'd found the answer to all of his problems. A few players short for the hoops squad this year, Felton saw what may be the crown jewel to his recruiting class that already includes Bill E. Goat.

"I saw him throwing this frisbee kind of thing, but everyone around kept on talking about Ultimate; I know this guy must be the Ultimate one," Felton said.

"BAAAAAHHHHH."Bill E. Goat
Freshman hoops star

When asked about Ultimate, Bill E. Goat said, "BAAAAAHHHHH." Roughly translated, that means, "Baaaaahhhh." This sheds quite a bit of light on the ability of this talented player.

The young man was playing an intense game with friends in the courtyard, and his athletic skill was obviously far greater than any other player currently on the squad.

Many have explained to Felton that it is possible the bystanders may have been referring to ultimate frisbee, not the player. Felton does not seem to care.

"Look at the behind-the-back, no-look pass this guy fired. We've got a picture of it if you don't believe me. I have not seen a pass like that since we were playing Kentucky last season," Felton said.

Unfortunately for Felton, as soon as he approached the player and said he was the basketball coach, the young man ran.

"I think he was scared that they were going to take away his eligibility and put him on probation," an anonymous friend of Ultimate said.

The anonymous friend added that Ultimate already has "better weekend plans" than playing intercollegiate basketball. A few pretty good parties were mentioned to THWUGA.

Of course, it would be against our policy to talk about these parties, but we would like to mention that the best of these parties is allegedly at the Spurts Editor's house next Friday night, with immediate family members and farm animals advised to bring "protection."

Coach Felton is still looking for the young man, who he keeps calling Ultimate, and has asked THWUGA for a bit of help.

"If you see this man around campus, please tell him that we're willing to give him a new car and anything he heard may or may not have been given to any previous players," Felton said.

Auburn cheats! Title IX trouble put to pasture

By Frank Abagnale
I come in spurts

The Georgia Dawgs lost to the Auburn Tigers. Not only was it a loss, but we was killed 24-6, raped more like it. Something just don't make cents. So here is the only possible explanation: they cheated.

The way I figure it, there's no other way we could lose that bad. It just ain't possible. There are so many ways that Auburn can cheat, just look to the passed for examples, and I just going to mention a few.

Firstly and foremostly, Auburn paid the refs, and it don't just have to be money. Sure Auburn probably slipped them the benjamins, but what about other non dineroyal things. I bet Auburn gave them alcohol and whores, too.

Not only that but what about the players. I swear I saw some NFL players playing in that game wearing Auburn jerseys. I mean we all know that those NFL players sign for millions coming out of college, but then immediately they spend it all on bling-bling—SUVs, gold chains (and gold teeth), NIKE shoes, fancy foods like tofu and fil-A-minion.

Then they come to realize, "[Shoot] guys, I spent all my dough. What I going to do now?" Then one day they get a call from Auburn saying they'll be paid good money to come play against the Dawgs, just one game. Well of course they have no other choice, because they are practically indentured cervantes. So then on gameday Auburn goes to their players in the locker room and says, "Hey guys, there's a big surprise, an early Christmas gift, in that janitors closet over there. Just walk-in, but don't open your eyes till we tell you." Once all the players are in, their coach closes the door and locks it. Then he flushes the key down the "Auburn probably slipped them some benjamins, but what about other non dineroyal things. I bet Auburn gave them alcohol and whores, too."

[toilet]. Next, the NFL players are secretly let in the backdoor to the locker room. "All right guys, you know the drill. Put on the uniforms and get warmed up. You're going to be playing the Dawgs," the coach said. Then he starts to walk out the door, but just before he makes it out, he says, "Oh yeah, the Dawgs sent you guys a note. It says you all are a bunch of [pansies], so go to hell. They'll keep your mothers company while you dead."

This seriously pisses off the NFL players. I mean pissed. They're like, "Let's go kick some serious ass. We not leaving till we personally smack everyone of them bastards."

So the NFL guys go out and play one hell of a game, and beat the Dawgs 24-6. That's how it happened. There's just no other way the Auburn Tigers could beat the Georgia Dawgs.

In desperate need of another sport to balance things out for Title IX, a girls' cow riding team has quickly formed. No experience is needed, but the coach would prefer young ladies who always ride hard.

By Moe Losses
Spurts fan

While Title IX has been problematic for universities across the country, U[sic]GA has no such problems complying with these regulations.

Last week when a football player wanted a scholarship for "his friend's cousin's girlfriend's uncle," the numbers looked as if they were going to be a problem again.

The football player threatened to leave the team if this essential scholarship money was not quickly found.

To make the delicate balancing act work out, a girls' cow riding team has been added. At first the girls were going to ride horses, but the administration found out that "equestrian" is a synonym for horse riding.

A quick-thinking administrator, Associate Dean of Making Sure Football Players are Happy Mike Green responded to the news by suggesting a different approach.

"Well, if we can't get the numbers right by letting them ride horses, we already got a hell a lot of cows, and I think the girls could probably ride them, too. Plus it would be damn cheap compared to the insurance for riding bulls," Green said.

"We knew that girls had been pushing for more outdoor sports for years, and this was the perfect opportunity to expand our horizons while offering improper benefits to football players as is standard at this fine college," said Dean of Making Sure Football Players are Happy Herschel Walker.

Ever since Mama done spelt my name wrong at birth with two few B's, I've been havin' some problems.

My sister dumped me when I was seven-year old for my other brother who was sixteen. She say he got a tractor license and I didn't.

That's the story of my life, she was my only sister, and I didn't have anywhere else to go.

Well, see, the Dawgs is my only team, and I just don't know where I'm headed these days.

We lost to freshmen quarterbacks at Tennessee and then Auburn whupped us. Coach even said they whupped us.

As my job, I'm supposed to do spurts analysis. Well, the spurts aren't going too well for me lately. A lot of times, things aren't coming out right at all.

This was going to be the year for us, but we just keep on losing.

The hoop team is not even on the television this year. They keep saying the FCC has rules against showing indecency, and I agree our team just isn't decent.

Of course I don't have a television, so this is irreverent to me.

With all this bad spurts, I don't really know what to do. When I told someone about these spurts, they recommended I go to the College of Computer Knowledge (COCK) advisor for help.

I don't know what this would do, as every time I go to the COCK I just end up turning around and leaving all sore; these people just keep upsetting me.

So, there's little help on campus for bad spurts, but I have a good idea. I hear from a fellow spurts columnist that Auburn's been cheatin', and they do good. And he's really good when it comes to spurts, so I think I suggest cheatin'.

Upon further review of the U[sic]GA curriculum, the administration has decided to broaden the majors eligible for those athletes competing in varsity studies. Athletes will now be able to major in their sport, which will require them to obtain 60 hours in order to graduate.

"Due to recent NCAA changes, we have decided to broaden our athletes horizons," said U[sic]GA president Michael Adams. "We realized that we were not going to be able to keep our athletes eligible for their specific sports with the strenuous time commitments of TGM (Turf Grass Management) and Basket Weaving."

These changes will most effect the football and basketball teams. The football team will be required to take 12 hours of football and 24 hours of weightlifting along with 12 hours of classes they won't know they are enrolled in, 6 hours of PE electives and 6 free electives.

All of these classes will be on a single-letter grading system of A. This will be equivalent to an A elsewhere on campus, but will help alleviate confusion.

"They only be teaching us about the letter A in the free elective, and we be getting confused by other letters, so this helps us out, I reckon," said Dean's List Football Star Michael Adams Jr.

This pales in comparison to the difficulty placed upon those who will be majoring in basketball. Basketball will require 6 hours of basketball, 12 hours of weightlifting, 3 hours of PE, and 39 hours of classes they won't know that they are in. Attendance for these classes will not be required, but will be encouraged.

These changes, along with supplying athletes with pencil and paper, are hoped to bring up U[sic]GA's academic ranking up to 118th among D-1 schools.

Of course, there are problems with this new system, especially with the pencil provision.

"I had done got stabbed about 14 times the first day my teammates had some pencils and [stuff]. Those mothers be dangerous for everyone to be carrying around. This one dude even stabbed himself three times and that hurt," Adams Jr. said.

Obviously, the NCAA has decided to take a look at these new majors, but have failed to make an official statement on them.

Current NCAA president Myles Brand was confronted outside of his office earlier this week and asked about the academics at U[sic]GA.

"We are always suspicious of U[sic]GA, but as long as they are winning and drawing in money for me I don't care," said Brand. "We'll have to evaluate their performance after next season to see if we have to take any action."

Football confused by lack of rain

U[sic]GA's football team continues to insist they will be playing in the SEC Championship in Atlanta. When they went to the Georgia Dome for a practice yesterday, confusion broke out. It was raining outside the dome, but the field was dry inside. All of the football players immediately were confused, moved to Atlanta and deemed it the city that never has rain.

Gymnastics flips out over decision

The Gym Dawgs were extremely upset by the elimination of the one meal plan. Historically gymnasts have received hundreds of dollars to spend on ribbons and training boot camps instead of having to "eat" at the cafeteria. New NCAA regulations require all students to eat. The gymnastics plan on a hunger strike to protest. Of course no one will be able to tell when it actually starts.

Tractor pull will begin on Tuesday

Since the monster truck rally was a long time ago, it's time for another big time event. The tractor pull will take over campus this Tuesday. This year's theme is "beer, beer and John Deere. If you get drunk, it'll be good. If you get really, really drunk, it'll be better.

There is a lot of glory and pride involved in this competition, especially the drinking part.

Horses and heifers make cheerleading

By Phil Macaque / I REALLY LIKE IT

With the recent cheerleading scandal, the squad has been accepting anyone and everyone who wants to join. A couple of the new additions have been put on the squad just in time for basketball season.

By Yo Mama
She likes my spurts

A recent revelation that cheerleaders have been discriminated against at U[sic]Ga has led to a slew of new members joining the squad.

"I knew that having to memorize an entire book of the Bible for tryouts seemed strange, but now I know the truth, and I want all my friends to rise up and cheer with me as well," said Rachel Slur.

Slur stood up to the cheerleading coach at the school, refusing to follow the "majority" who followed the coach's every instruction.

"I just kept telling the coach that she was wrong and that isn't right and everybody should be able to cheerlead," Slur said.

School spirit soared to new heights when the coach was fired and Slur was let onto the team without a tryout.

At least a dozen people and animals showed up the following day and talked about the discrimination they had experienced.

When asked about this starling decision, Bill E. Goat said, "BAAAAAHHHHH." Roughly translated, that means, "Baaaaah-hhhh." This certainly sheds some light on the subject. It should be noted that Bill may have been happy when he said this.

Many farm friends quickly joined the rally to become cheerleaders. Three horses showed up and protested that they had been discriminated against for their views and were immediately placed on the squad.

"I know discrimination when I see it, and this was as clear of a case as I've seen at the University[sic]," said Michael Adams.

Along with the horses, a multitude of heifers made their presence felt as they invaded the cheerleading ranks.

"Us heifers, we may be large and we may not be usually seen as cheerleaders, but we have got some junk in the trunk when they be playin' the funk," said Amanda Jones, a third-year Turf Management major.

Approximately twenty-five heifers showed up at president Michael Adams' pad to protest and were automatically placed on the team.

In a possibly related story, three former cheerleaders, who also dropped by the protest at Adams' fly crib, have disappeared.

"All I can say is that when us heifers get hungry, we be likin' to eat some lean meat, especially when there's some ketchup and [stuff] around," Jones said.

The new members of the cheerleading squad were not the only ones happy with the decision to form a more diverse squad, Adams also had an opinion.

"I really like a big ass, and these were some of the finest asses I'd ever seen," Adams said.

Of course, the donkeys often have a difficult time with dance moves, but they have a lot to add to the squad.

THWUGA has been informed that cheerleading tryouts have been extended as a result of the improper behavior of the former coach.

Adams has decided to take over the squad for the rest of the season, himself. Some may worry about his qualifications, but Adams seems unconcerned.

"I may not know very much about cheerleading, but I certainly know a whole bunch about scandals, so I feel this is my area of expertise," he said.
