A little about us

The screenshot shows a Microsoft Internet Explorer browser window with the address bar displaying <http://www.libs.uga.edu/ejournals/>. The website header features the text "University of Georgia Libraries" and navigation links for "Home", "Sitemap", and "Search". Below the header is a banner with several images, including a woman's face and a sunflower. The main content area is titled "locating full-text articles and journals" and includes a "Beta Version Send us feedback" link. There are two search sections: "Search By Article" and "Search By Journal".

Search By Article

1. Enter one of the following:

How about you?

- Do you have one or several Electronic Resources Librarians? In which department(s)
- How is your serials work organized? Is serials acquisitions in a larger acquisitions dept? Is serials cataloging in the same dept. as serials acquisitions?
- Which ILS do you use?
- Do you use a linking service?

The challenges

- Access
- Workflow

Collaboration

collaboration kəˈlæːbɔːrɪˈʃən. [n. of action, f. L. collabo rā re to collaborate: prob. immediately from French.]

1. United labour, co-operation; esp. in literary, artistic, or scientific work.
 - 1860 C. Reade Eighth Commandm. 374 It is plain that collaboration was not less..than it now is in France.
 - 1889 Spectator 19 Oct. 522/1 Improvised by that fertile writer in collaboration with MM. Arsène Houssaye and Verteuil;

How about you

- How do the areas involved with electronic serials communicate?
- How is workflow established?

Decision Making

- Provide access to e-serials in the catalog
- Create separate order records for each title and enter through our agent

How about you?

- Do you catalog your e-serials?
- How do you order your online titles?
- How and by whom are these decisions made?
