DACS:

What It Is, and Why It Helps

Describing Archives: A Content Standard

- A descriptive national standard for structure and content
- Developed out of the need to
  - Accommodate international standards
  - Take into account new methods of description, including EAD
  - Provide an “output neutral” set of standards (for inventories, MARC records, finding aids of all kinds)
How DACS Developed

- AACR2 (Chapter 4)
- RAD
- ISAD(G) + ISAAR(CPF)
- CUSTARD
- USTARD
- DACS (end of 2004)

Some Principles of DACS

- Archives possess materials with unique characteristics
- Respect des fonds principle
- Description reflects arrangement
- In addition to the materials themselves, creators of archival materials must be described
- Output neutral: Works for EAD finding aids, MARC records, other Differences: Bibliographic vs. Archival Description

- Bibliographic materials: “Self-conscious” creations, published in some form, description entails transcription, description of artifact
- Archival materials: Generated in the course of doing business/living lives, descriptions are abstractions, focus on description of content
- “Tidy vs. messy”

Description and Cataloging: The Pyramid

- Surrogate 2 (the catalog record)
- Surrogate 1 (the finding aid)
- The collection itself

Benefits of DACS

- Provides standards
- Enables us to cooperate inter- and intradepartmentally
- Allows interoperability
- Archives can submit materials to national databases (OCLC, ArchivesGrid, ArchivesUSA)
- Ultimately benefits researchers themselves
Minimum Elements in a DACS Output

- Reference Code
- Name/Location of Repository
- Title
- Date
- Extent
- Name of Creator (if known)
- Scope and Content
- Conditions Governing Access
- Languages/Scripts of the Material

Administrative History of the Georgia Tech Athletic Association

The Georgia Tech Athletic Association is a non-profit corporation responsible for overseeing the university's participation in intercollegiate sports. It is governed by a Board of Trustees made of three alumni, three students, seven faculty members, with the head of the institution presiding over the group. The Athletic Association was started in January of 1901 to raise money for the university's fledgling sports program. Its first goal was to reinstate the Georgia Tech football team, which had been disbanded the previous year after a winless 1900 season. When the group was incorporated in 1902, its first fundraising activity was to sell 400 shares of five dollar stock. Since then, the Athletic Association has been responsible for raising funds for all of Georgia Tech's athletic teams and provides and maintains the facilities for its athletic programs.
Description

The administrative files in this collection contain documents created by the Athletic Association for the purpose of arranging athletic competitions between Georgia Tech and other educational institutions. These materials include the Annual Director’s reports, proceedings from Board of Trustee meetings, and correspondence. The contracts include contracts between Georgia Tech and its coaching staff from 1904 to 1927; of particular interest are the contracts of John W. Heisman, for whom the Heisman trophy is named. The hearings contain the proceedings of the 1908 Southeastern Intercollegiate Athletic Association's investigation into Georgia Tech’s recruitment policies. The charges, which were brought by University of Georgia alumni, were eventually determined to be groundless. A group of materials on individual sports consists of manuscripts relating to Georgia Tech’s football program as well as materials about athletic teams other than football. Also included in this collection are a series of programs for unique sporting events and for regularly scheduled games, particularly between the University of Georgia and Georgia Tech. The last series contains larger items from other series in the collection, including large souvenir programs and oversized contract forms. Also included in this series is a single blueprint of a 1927 planned remodelling of the west stands in Grant Field.

Detailed Description of the Collection

SERIES 1: Administrative files, 1910-1974

Description

SERIES 1 contains documents created by the Athletic Association for the purpose of arranging athletic competitions between Georgia Tech and other educational institutions (e.g., University of Georgia, Oglethorpe University, University of Alabama). These materials include the Annual Director's reports, proceedings from Board of Trustee meetings, and correspondence. The correspondence primarily consists of letters and contractual agreements that were exchanged between the Presidents of Georgia Tech and the heads of the rival schools concerning the logistics of organizing athletic events. This series also includes three folders of newspaper clippings on Georgia Tech football and the rivalry between the North Georgia and South Georgia high school football teams during the 1950s and 1960s.
