1917 MODEL
LIGHT BUT FAST.
Seventeen callings were adopted by the graduating class of 1906 at Yale College. At the end of five years those who had taken up life insurance had average annual incomes of $1,872.33, compared to $1,280.82 for the class as a whole.

As a profession life insurance is attracting the best young men of the country. It offers a quick and permanent income, requires no long period of preparation or the investment of capital, and leaves a man the master of his own promotion.

Southern educational institutions are training men for service in the South. Southern financial, industrial and commercial institutions are in need of the services these young men are fitted to give.

Managed by men reared in the South, familiar with the customs, characteristics and needs of its people—

The Southern States Life Insurance Company

Offers opportunity for profitable employment of the young men of the South not possible with other like organizations.

Before finally deciding upon a career every "Tech" graduate is invited to investigate the advantages offered in a contract with this strong Southern company.
