CANDID CAMER

Coast Artillery, Infantry, Signal Corps, and Ordnance, four units at Tech which contribute young officers to our national defense. The Coast Artillery spent six weeks on the beach of Pensacola, Fla., and during the time learned much about using the big coast defense guns. The Infantry went to Anniston, Ala., and the wooded area around Fort McClellan furnished good setting for practice in tactics and various maneuvers with gas, machine guns, and other Infantry weapons.
On its annual summer cruise, the Naval Unit of Georgia Tech enjoyed the privilege of visiting one foreign country and seeing part of our own country along with much adventure and work on a United States Man of War.

After embarking on the U.S.S. Wyoming and the U.S.S. Dickerson in early June at Charleston, S. C., they left for a non-stop sail to New York City. After visiting the World's Fair for two days, the anchor was weighed and the next point of land was Boston, Mass. Once a year the Bostonians celebrate Bunker Hill Day in a fashion which could be surpassed only by the great Mardi Gras, and with bright uniforms shining in the June sun the Naval Cadets marched over the streets of Boston for a period of five hours.

Then came the long trek down the Atlantic Coast, around the Island of Cuba, thru Windward Passage to the Naval Base at Guantanamo, Cuba. Here they stayed for seven days to execute target practice with the big guns. Upholding the reputation of Georgia Tech, this Naval Unit took away all prizes at gunnery competition between Harvard, Yale, Northwestern, and Tulane Universities.

Havana proved quite an attraction for the embryo sailors. Kissing the señoritas goodbye and steering out past the fort, Morro Castle, Tech sailors set a course for Pensacola, Fla., and thence home.
FIRST ROW: Observing signals thru a mounted telescope: gun loading drills; deck of the Wyoming. SECOND ROW: More and more loading drills; inspection on the Wyoming. THIRD ROW: Instruction in novel science by the ship’s officers: quarters for muster; arms and men for defense. FOURTH ROW: Tech sailors as part of the crew on the Buckeye. “Every man must know his station!” after four o’clock.
