Over the loud speaker at a distant Allied Air Base comes the warning call “Enemy Aircraft Approaching—Scramble.” In trigger-quick response—fighter planes are manned. Then, with deafening roar, a squadron of Army Airacobras takes the air.

Courageous and determined, these Army Air Force Pilots rise to combat, confident that they man the hardest-hitting single-engine fighters in the world. These men deserve the best America can put behind them.

A forward looking Aircraft Industry had sensed for years America’s need for fighter planes that would out-fly and out-fight the best the enemy could offer. While ominous war clouds gathered into thunder-heads new plans and planes were under way.

Working with our Army Air Force we created the P-39 Army Airacobra. Free from precedent our engineers developed a new design from nose to tail. They put a cannon in the nose—placed the engine behind the pilot—gave it a tricycle landing gear. They made it a powerful weapon designed expressly for the needs of war.

Today these deadly fighter-planes serve Allied forces on fighting fronts around the world. But some day victory will come. War-trained pilots will return to take their places in a new world of accelerated transportation. America will create new planes to carry on her commerce in the skies.

That day will find Bell Aircraft ready—ready with its engineering skill, assembly lines and trained personnel converted to the pursuits of peace-time aviation.

DIXIE, along with the rest of AMERICA, is at War. While it lasts, Uncle Sam has first claim on everything we produce.

When it's over, we'll be back with all the old familiar ARMCO DRAINAGE Products so extensively used by the Highway Construction Industry in the South for the past 35 years—plus some new ones.
