

RESEARCH FOR THE REAL WORLD

MEASURING DENTAL FILLING SHRINKAGE

The polymer dental-filling material, used today by most dentists, tends to shrink when it is cured in a tooth causing a tooth to crack or decay. GTRI researchers along with clinicians from the Medical College of Georgia are now conducting tests that could lead to the development of stronger dental fillings and healthier teeth for millions of Americans.