Campus Humor

While having a drink in a bar, the cowboy noticed that, at about five minutes till nine, all the patrons began to leave. "Where's everybody going?" he asked the barman.

"Well, Apache Joe's due in about nine o'clock," the barman replied, "and he means trouble—you'd better take off."

"Listen," answered the cowboy, "I ain't afraid of man nor beast—I'm stayin' right here."

Soon, the cowboy, feeling no pain, was snapped from his reverie at the sight of two tremendous hands ripping the swinging doors from their hinges. In came a huge beast of a man—about 6'-5", 285 pounds, riding a huge black bear, and leading a panther by a length of chain. Around his bull neck was slung a 6 foot rattler.

The monster dismounted from the bear and kicked it contemptuously into a corner, where it cowered quietly. After tossing the panther behind the bar and kissing the rattler before flinging it away, he roared to the barman, "Gimme a gallon o' sulfuric acid!"

The barman hefted a jug of acid to the bar, and the cowboy shivered as the hostile man killed the gallon at a gulp.

"What're you doin' here, bud?" roared the monster, noticing the cowboy.

"N-N-Nothing, J-J-Just havin' a drink," stammered the craven rancher.

"Well," said the beast, "you'd better clear out, 'cause Apache Joe's comin'!"

Miss Anne Minter is pictured sitting beside the sea where she spent a long vacation away from the rigors of Agnes Scott and a heavy social life. Here's hoping Miss Minter is ready to renew old friendships with the return of fall quarter. Anne is a well known advocate of the liberal dating policies imposed by the good Deans of St. Agnes by the Tracks. She says "I just love having to be back in the dorms by 9:15; it really lets me get my beauty sleep. (Photo by Dozier.)
