NO ENGINEER, REGARDLESS of his field, has received a complete education without knowledge of certain subjects basic to the engineering profession. The studies Engineering Drawing and Mechanics are two courses that supply training necessary to all phases of work concerned with technology. This department has these standards of technical proficiency to instill within the students of Georgia Tech.

Engineering Drawing, fortified with a course in descriptive geometry, is designed to give a basic ability in drafting and understanding drawings and representing them graphically: Mechanics deals with force and its effect in producing and changing motion, and in altering shapes of bodies. This is the foundation for all design and construction.

PROFESSOR ADAMS discusses literature with his afternoon English class.

Department of English

The English Department is one of the largest and oldest departments on the campus. Its goal is to teach certain required courses to all freshmen and sophomores and to a large percentage of the juniors, as well as offering elective courses to a great number of upperclassmen.

Every engineer must be able to express his ideas clearly and concisely to succeed in his work. In addition, a knowledge of the classic literature of all times is necessary for a well-rounded man. The English Department strives to teach these essentials to all students at Tech.

The English Department is especially interested in campus organizations and supplies faculty advisors to certain student publications.

ANDREW J. WALKER
PT STUDENTS COMPETE in one of the lengthy runs.

STRENGTH OF ONE’S MIND and body are closely related. The Department of Physical Training presents a good two year course designed to keep the student bodily fit while at Tech and in addition give him some instruction and motivation in “carry over” sports and activities that he may enjoy after graduation.

The freshman course of instruction is divided into swimming, gymnastics, and track. The swimming course is nationally known as a “survival” course. The gym develops skill and bodily coordination. The track course develops lungs, heart, and generally conditions the muscles.

The sophomores take indoor, outdoor, and recreative sports. These are designed to serve primarily as “maintenance” courses.
Department of Social Science

THE SOCIAL SCIENCE DEPARTMENT strives to give a broad background of general training in non-technical fields. These courses tend to broaden the student's view of the complex problems of society. The three main parts of the course are Western Civilization, Industrial Sociology, and Anthropology. The main purpose of the department is to teach students to understand human relations, thus making it an integral part of the program of general education. Many elective courses in history and economics are also offered by the department. Some of the courses in history are offered to history requirement for graduation in a Georgia college. Still others fulfill the constitution requirement for graduation. All courses are designed to broaden the student's education and prepare him for the future.

Department of Modern Languages

THE DEPARTMENT OF MODERN LANGUAGES was organized to give the student sufficient mastery of a foreign language to read and understand the scientific and technical literature, and to inform the student of the civilization and literature of the countries who use that language. They feel that the well-informed engineer must have a broad background of general training in fields not especially technical. They also feel that the student will benefit from the foreign languages by being able to understand either conversation or writing in these languages. Some schools have language requirements in their curriculum so that the students in that school will be familiar with foreign literature written about their profession.
THE PURPOSE OF THE Department of Psychology is to emphasize the human factor in all phases of engineering and industrial management. To guide the pupil in his dealings with the human element and to introduce some of the various moods of human nature are the main objectives of this department. An attempt has been made to make the student sensitive to the whole man, his attitude, his feelings, his fears, and his desire for recognition and security. Through these courses the human element takes its rightful place among the factors which make up fine engineers and managers. Future plans are being made to introduce a new school on campus called Industrial Psychology. In this modern age there is a great demand for engineers with a psychology background.

ENGINEERS ENTERING INDUSTRY today need a knowledge of the problems of health and sanitation, and the modern techniques used by the industries in their solution of these problems. To provide this knowledge courses are available in biology, anatomy, and physiology as well as sanitation and industrial hygiene. The department of Public Health offers courses on the sophomore, junior, and senior level. Although some of their courses are electives, many are required courses for many of the schools. Public Health courses are a very important phase of Sanitary Engineering. The elective courses within the department of Public Health and Biology are designed to give the engineering student a more rounded education.

SCHOOLS AND SENIORS
IN TODAY'S MODERN AGE the emphasis on supersonic flight and the possibility of man's flight into space have contributed to the prominence of the aeronautical engineer.

This school was established in 1930 through a gift from the Daniel Guggenheim Fund. There are in addition to the undergraduate curriculum, facilities for advanced work on the master's degree. The advanced work will prepare the student for research, high level design, or teaching aeronautics.

The physical plant, housed in two buildings, is well equipped for offering laboratory work to augment and lend interest to the theoretical courses. Features of the plant are the 9 foot and 2 ½ foot tunnels and the supersonic wind tunnel.

School of Architecture

AN ARCHITECTURE STUDENT CAREFULLY APPLIES A PORTION OF A WALL TO HIS PRIZE DESIGN.

TECH'S SCHOOL OF ARCHITECTURE has as its primary aim to provide a broad and thorough preparation in the design profession. This preparation requires an architect to be imaginative and practical, as well.

In the process of training an architect in the various aspects of the profession, the School of Architecture offers four options: architectural designs, structural design, industrial design, and light construction industry. The first two are five year courses leading to a Bachelor of Architecture degree and the second two are four year courses leading to a Bachelor of Science.

At the Graduate level the school offers to qualified students a two year program in city planning and a one year masters program in architecture.

THE SATELLITE AGE has increased the demand for ceramic engineers tremendously. The ceramic engineer has produced such non-metallic materials as glass, brick, tile, and more recently, nose cone for ballistics missiles from one of the earth's most common substances.

Broad basic training is given in the fundamental and engineering course, thus preparing the student to enter successfully any division of the ceramic engineering field. The classroom, laboratory and library work are coordinated to combine theoretical and practical knowledge.

The course of instruction covers four years and leads to a degree of Bachelor of Ceramic Engineering. Graduate work leading to a degree of Master of Science in Ceramic Engineering is also offered.

CHEMICAL ENGINEERING involves the development and operation of industrially useful chemical processes or the conversion of some discovery of chemistry into a practical industrial operation. In today’s accelerated industrial and manufacturing age the chemical engineer is in a prominent position.

A bachelor’s degree is offered for completion of the four-year undergraduate program. The School of Chemical Engineering offers master’s work, also, and was Tech’s first doctorate offering department.

By limiting registration in the Junior and Senior classes and providing a fine curriculum, the School of Chemical Engineering has made immense progress and has provided key men for this highly technical industry.

School of Chemistry

CHEMISTRY IS A REQUIRED course for all freshmen, and there are many departments having required chemistry courses. It has been in the basic curriculum since the establishment of Tech.

The Chemistry curriculum is especially attractive since there are a number of electives which permit a student to later change to such courses as law or medicine. Completion of the undergraduate program leads to a Bachelor of Science degree. In addition, masters and doctorate work is offered. The doctorate degree is offered in the fields of organic, physical, inorganic and analytical chemistry.

Paving the way for the advancement of industry and manufacturing, the chemist is truly the man-behind-the-scenes in technology today.

CIVIL ENGINEERING is the oldest of the engineering professions. It involves the coordination and direction of the resources of nature, man, and machines toward the goal of better living for all mankind.

The fields of civil engineering are structural and construction engineering, sanitary engineering, hydraulic engineering, transportation, soils engineering, municipal engineering, and surveying and mapping.

The plant includes modern classrooms and drafting rooms and some of the best labs in the nation.

Main emphasis is placed on the basic laws and concepts that enable the student to attack any problem in a logical manner.

Satisfactory completion of four years leads to a degree of Bachelor of Civil Engineering.

IN AN AGE OF missile guidance systems, electronic computers, high fidelity sound systems and radio telescopes, the electrical engineer has a role of ever increasing importance. The electrical engineer at Tech receives instruction in the basic sciences, math and cultural courses as well as special courses dealing with his chosen field.

The school of electrical engineering is the largest at Tech. The program of this school prepares graduates to enter any phase of electrical engineering. This school also offers ample laboratory work where it is appropriate.

At the end of four years, on satisfactory completion of the course, he receives the degree of bachelor of electrical engineering.

INDUSTRIAL ENGINEERING is a highly necessary field in this day of high speed production and technical advances.

The industrial engineering facilities include well equipped labs and lecture rooms. Visiting lecturers and plant trips are also an essential part of the curriculum. The industrial engineering student upon completion of the course is awarded the degree of Bachelor of Industrial Engineering and is well prepared to assume his place in industry.

Since industrial engineering connotes leadership in most industries, much emphasis is placed on sound judgment and scientific knowledge instead of special techniques and handbook formulas as is the practice in some other departments.

FORMER GRADUATES run through a problem in industrial management.

THE SCHOOL OF INDUSTRIAL MANAGEMENT trains students for positions of a management or supervisory nature in industry.

The curriculum includes economics, organization and management of production, marketing management, personnel management and labor relations. Underlying these areas of study is a background in basic sciences, mathematics, and engineering. Since the requirements for executive positions in industry have become much higher in recent years, a more comprehensive, liberalized course of study is necessary for industrial managers.

Satisfactory completion of the four year curriculum leads to the degree of Bachelor of Science in Industrial Management.

THE SCHOOL OF MATHEMATICS embodies one of man's oldest sciences, yet its importance continues to grow rapidly. Instruction is provided in important mathematical disciplines to students in all branches of engineering.

The number of advanced courses in mathematics now outnumbers the undergraduate courses three to one, in spite of the fact that every freshman and sophomore takes courses in the Math department.

The use of the Rich Electronic Computer Center has paved the way for a deeper look into one of man's most fascinating sciences. Seminars and colloquia on applied mathematics complete the programs which lead to a Bachelor of Science and Master of Science in Applied Mathematics.

THE SCHOOL OF MECHANICAL ENGINEERING has the honor of granting Tech's oldest degree, which has been awarded every year since 1888.

The fundamental aim of the course is to acquaint the student with the basic rudiments of the generation, transmission, and utilization of heat and mechanical energy, as well as the production of tools and machines, and their products.

There are no optional courses in Mechanical Engineering, but electives are provided whereby a student may have some choice of subjects most suited to his individual desires. The curriculum is designed to provide the basis for future advancement of Mechanical Engineering graduates as professional engineers and as citizens.

FOR THE PRECEDING DECADES physicists have lead in the scientific exploits of the world. Their influence is felt in every department on the Georgia Tech campus. Today, the physicist is departing from the laboratory and working hand in hand with the engineer to find practical applications for their work. Both the technical and practical progress in the field of physics is going forward faster than ever before.

Since physics is a necessity for the engineer, all sophomores at Georgia Tech are offered basic courses in this field. The completion of four years in the field of physics leads to a degree of Bachelor of Science in Physics with advanced courses of study offered. The curriculum is designed for the student to select either a practical or scientific phase.

WITH THE ADVENT of the many new kinds of fibers now being produced, the textile industry is undergoing the greatest period of growth in its history. The A. French School of Textile Engineering is helping this growth in two important ways. The school’s program of textile research and development, along with similar programs at other colleges, has helped develop many new fibers and processes. In addition the school, with its complete processing and manufacturing plant, supplies the well trained engineers that are vital to the industry’s continued growth.

The school offers the Bachelor of Science of Textiles degree in Textile Dyeing and Chemistry and in Textile Manufacturing, as well as the Bachelor of Science in Textile Engineering.
