Dean Bear oversees new mandates on increasing student awareness of forest fires.

Admissions cut with increased reading levels

By Moe Ronn
Academic Mediocrity Officer

Last year, U[sic]/GA decided to increase the minimum reading standards for incoming freshmen to the 3rd grade level. The change resulted in a 50% cut in admissions.

This decision was made in response to recent budget cuts by the University System of Georgia’s Board of Regents (BoR) due to the economic downturn. These budget cuts have forced U[sic]/GA to make cuts to their faculty size. Of which, the admissions staff was hit the hardest.

“Our staff is simply unable to go through the applications of the many otherwise fine second-graders. To help them we increased the minimum reading standards to aid our admissions staff,” said Lon Pole, director of admissions.

Also because of budget cuts U[sic]/GA has been forced to delay the hiring and refilling of vacated faculty positions.

“This downturn has made us unable to maintain the superb faculty that has provided the students with the quality-particle experience, we mean education, that we have provided for so long,” Pole said.

With the cuts in admissions, U[sic]/GA can expect to maintain the similar student-faculty ratios compared to previous years, finally bringing them in line with state day-care and child safety standards, a long-time goal.

U[sic]/GA has found itself particularly hard-hit by this financial crisis. When the BoR announced the budget cuts they are expressed as a percentage or portion of the operating budget.

“Because we don’t have the prominence of other schools like Georgia Tech and whatever, we can’t command as large of a research budget that would otherwise provide some support during these financially difficult times,” said Harry Pitts, senior vice president for finance administration.

Bear named new Dean of Forestry

By Chris P. Bacon
Bear Mediator

Officials at U[sic]/GA announced last Friday that Smokey D. Bear has been named the new Dean of the Warnell School of Forestry and Natural Resources. Reports have come in from local residents claiming that Dean Smokey is not in fact the well-known fire safety advocate from the United States Forest Service public service announcements, but is instead a 456 lb. male black bear that had been seen lumbering around campus earlier in the week.

The hire came as quite a shock to many at the school including the former Dean himself who was forced to flee through a second story window after the bear was led into his office with a trail of mixed nuts and assorted berries and locked inside. The bear’s first order of business as the new dean was to run about wildly, knocking over tables, chairs, and bookshelves. This redaction was followed by an extended nap on the antique executive desk.

Although it was previously believed that they would intervine in the matter, the Board of Regents has decided to “let this one go,” according to the Board’s Vice Chair Richard D. Phillips, “since it definitely can’t make things any worse there.” When reached for comment, Dean Smokey bared his executive desk.

ECONOMIC PLUNGER

Toilet paper shortages may lead to a lack of UGA diplomas

By Joe Plumber
Plumber Extraordinaire

The flagging economy has slowed the production of many commodities, including the toilet paper industry. This shortage could have severe repercussions, includin’ one on diploma availability, a worry plaguing the U[sic]/GA.

“There is definite concern that there might not be enough toilet paper with which to print our diplomas on come graduation day,” said Seymour Butte, director of both Administrations and one of the Alcoholics Anonymous clinics in Athens. “We’ve been thinking of several replacements, but there aren’t many materials that hold as many advantages that toilet paper does. For example, we pride ourselves in telling prospective students that a Georgia degree holds many advantages. Like, if you had to go to the bathroom and it turns out that the owner forgot to stock up on toilet paper, well then you’ll be in luck as you’ll have your diploma. In fact, research shows that our diplomas...
THWUGA: As much about us as them

By the Technique

If it’s your first year at Georgia Tech—or if you are a University of Georgia student lucky enough to lay eyes on this issue of the Technique—welcome to “To Hell With Georgia,” a very special edition of the “The South’s Liveliest College Newspaper.” In the following pages you will find alcohol, rednecks, farm animals and lots of dawgs.

We members of the Technique are often asked how the tradition of THWUGA began. Friends say that by producing such a “rag,” we Tech students merely perpetuate unfortunate stereotypes—of Athens students as drunken rednecks and ourselves as geeks with inferiority complexes—that are no longer as true as they once were. The answer to these questions are the same every time: THWUGA is as much about us as it is about our rivals.

Some 97 years ago, the first edition of the Technique published on Nov. 17, 1911 was a four-page edition of the “SOUTH’s LIVELIEST COLLEGE NEWS,” the moniker of “To Hell With Georgia.”

In an act to preserve national pride, the Prime Minister of Greece announced Monday that after dealing with decades of disappointment and embarrassment, the citizens of Greece have elected to rename the nation’s capital and largest city, Athens, to end its association with its former sister city of Athens, Georgia.

Recent polls have indicated that many residents of the city have been confused for quite some time as to why the birthplace of such great ideas like democracy, philosophy, and modern science would be affiliated with a community that is home to the “cesspool of the South.”

Many went as far as saying that they actually hate the small Georgian city, its obsession with emus and Flat Heat, and the general lack of basic hygienic practices amongst the population. A tiny village on the outskirts of the capital has even submitted multiple proposals to the government, all outlining a plan to “summon the power of Zeus to sink the whole place into the ocean just like Atlantis” stating that it would be “wicked awesome!”

Although the referendum was passed through Parliament on Sunday, there is still no official word on what the new name will be.

Dean

“Doody-headed Gator fan!”

Dean Scruff McGruff, a 9-year-old Bloodhound once used for hunting, has streamlined the curriculum at UGA’s School of Law to include learning to sniff out guilty culprits, bark madly, and bite if necessary. Dean G. Gecko, a student’s former pet lizard, has been rather successful at the Terry College of Business bringing the graduation rate up to an astounding 3.5%—its highest ever.

POWER UP YOUR STUDY SESSION AT MIDNIGHT BREAKFAST

FREE BREAKFAST!!!

TUESDAY OF FINALS WEEK

10:00 P.M. - 12:00 A.M.

STUDENT CENTER FOOD COURT

GT STUDENTS ONLY. MUST BRING BUZZCARD.

RESERVE YOUR TIME IN ADVANCE!

SIGN UP FOR A TIME SLOT AT: BUZZCARD.GATECH.EDU

SPONSORED BY: STUDENT CENTER PROGRAMS COUNCIL WITH FUNDING FROM SLAB

City of Athens, Greece renamed

By Hercules Cacophopulos

Senior Demigod

Citizens of Athens, Greece, demand name change following more than 200 years of humiliation due to another Athens institution.

In an act to preserve national pride, the Prime Minister of Greece announced Monday that after dealing with decades of disappointment and embarrassment, the citizens of Greece have elected to rename the nation’s capital and largest city, Athens, to end its association with its former sister city of Athens, Georgia.

Recent polls have indicated that many residents of the city have been confused for quite some time as to why the birthplace of such great ideas like democracy, philosophy, and modern science would be affiliated with a community that is home to the “cesspool of the South.”

Many went as far as saying that they actually hate the small Georgian city, its obsession with emus and Flat Heat, and the general lack of basic hygienic practices amongst the population. A tiny village on the outskirts of the capital has even submitted multiple proposals to the government, all outlining a plan to “summon the power of Zeus to sink the whole place into the ocean just like Atlantis!” stating that it would be “wicked awesome!”

Although the referendum was passed through Parliament on Sunday, there is still no official word on what the new name will be.

Dean

“Doody-headed Gator fan!”

Dean Scruff McGruff, a 9-year-old Bloodhound once used for hunting, has streamlined the curriculum at UGA’s School of Law to include learning to sniff out guilty culprits, bark madly, and bite if necessary. Dean G. Gecko, a student’s former pet lizard, has been rather successful at the Terry College of Business bringing the graduation rate up to an astounding 3.5%—its highest ever.
Mysterious cave drawings revealed

By Art Syfartsy
Covington

Late last week, renowned cryptozoologist Dr. Fanny O’Rear arrived in Athens to personally continue his search for the artist apparently using U[sic]GA buildings as his or her artistic canvas.

In a recent interview about his new mission, O’Rear stated, “From the evidence so readily apparent, it is clear to me we must be dealing with a living specimen of man’s Cro-Magnon ancestors. The faculty was dubious at my first insistent pleas to commence a search. They ignored me for weeks: taking the opportunity to constantly lambaste me that the only possible explanation of such art on their campus would be invisible aliens or a rather intelligent farm animal.”

However, Dr. O’Rear’s moment came when bipedal prints appeared under the newest work. Most everyone has rapidly shifted their idea as to what he can use those prints for. The faculty, in a move to identify if this individual is hiding among the student body, has dispersed artistic aptitude tests.

“We will feel so proud if this cavern is among our students,” said Professor Griese, “never have I held out so much hope that a U[sic]GA student could have such a talent to develop.”

Grades have refused to present the results of the examination. Rumors suggest that multiple students have met the criteria for the suspected specimen. However, Griese shared some of his hopes as to the eventual conclusion.

Griese said, “Never had I thought it possible, but here we just may be able to identify a pre-historic person by intelligence. Think of what may be revealed when he or she is discovered. Could it even be that he is of a clan that has survived here at U[sic]GA with little or no genetic harm since the establishment of this institution? I find that to be my grandest dream now that I have witnessed this U[sic]GA environment.”

In related news, Geico, having heard the possibility of a living Cro-Magnon, has changed its tagline to “So easy a dawg could do it.”

In related news, Geico, having heard the possibility of a living Cro-Magnon, has changed its tagline to “So easy a dawg could do it.”

Diploma from page 1

accrued more value after such usage. If we were to switch materials then there would be no advantage,” Butte said.

Some think this break from tradition represents a grave threat to the university.

“It’s been the time-honored tradition to print our diplomas on high quality toilet paper. We’ve already broken from our other traditions like upgrading the minimum required reading level to the third grade. Besides, why do I need to take English? I already know English. It’s impossible for me to fail it. Look at what’s happened ever since the switch: enrollment already dropped 50%. A change to our diploma material would be a greater threat to our institution than mandating a basic level of hygiene,” said Jim Shorts, an irate redneck who didn’t actually attend U[sic]GA.

Actual Georgia students are split upon the possibility of a change.

“I mean, what’s going to like happen if we had to like go back packing like in the woods or something? You know what I mean? Like I wouldn’t have needed to pack extra toilet stuff as I could have just brought my diploma. If I were to bring extra toilet stuff then I wouldn’t be able to bring all my old Sports Illustrated issues back when our football team was still number 1,” said Heywood Jablomey, a 12th year senior majoring in Cowbell Instrumentation.

Other students think the change is a good thing.

“As for Jablomey, I’ve got an idea as to what he can use those old issues for. Anyways, who cares what the diplomas are printed on? They can use whatever type of paper they want for all I care like tissue or graphite. The real value is in the education we receive. After all, you never know when you have to weave baskets underwater,” said Jenny Tulls, a 6th year Underwater Basket Weaver.

Though the discussion remains heated, officials are confident a solution is close. “Here at Georgia, we believe in tradition but that doesn’t mean we won’t embrace something new. I mean, it was acceptable before to date our cousins and once it became frowned upon, some students persisted. Now look at the progress we’ve made, reports of inter-cousin shenanigans at Athens are down 10% this year! I am supremely confident that Georgia will weather this storm like it has previous ones,” Butte said.

Return to SC at the lost and found … or to GT police, they be all around… Just please, please return my key… or to GT police, they be all around… Return to SC at the lost and found …
We Thunk It

Remember, licking doorknobs is illegal on other planets!
—Spongebob Squarepants

Opinions Editor: Esther Bunni

OUR VIEWS Consensus Opinion

Save real majors from cuts
Law school should be eliminated due to budget constraints

We feel like we need to speak out against the injustices of cutting the budgets of all schools on campus equally, when the most of students will be hurt by such allocations. Instead of letting all departments suffer in these trying economic times, we should be brave enough to simply cut the departments that real dawgs don’t need and save the real majors from cuts that we don’t like.

Although we see the importance of departments such as the law school to the few students enrolled there, most students at U[nic]GA would not feel the loss of those majors. By cutting from their departments, we can ensure that there is enough money to sustain the departments that are the lifeblood of our university, like football.

When faced with a crisis like statewide budget cuts, everyone’s gotta wanna make sacrifices and agree to scale programs back to the core of what bein a Dawg means.

For the majority of students here, we can agree that the schools that matter are those we can actually make a living off of when we graduate like Crop Sciences and Animal Husbandry.

No one will miss the law school students constantly using big words in the dining hall and insisting that animals be contained to one side of campus and not allowed to graze freely. Plus, their soon-to-be-empty buildings can be demolished to have more room for farming land.

If just cutting the law school does not free enough money to save other departments from cuts, we then suggest cutting the math department. Not failing Geometry would help boost all of our GPAs anyway.

We’re hopin that the administration seriously considers our proposal for the common good. By gettin the law school, they maintain the best interests of the majority of students, and besides, havin less lawyers in the world would be an added bonus.

The Consensus Opinion reflects the majority opinion of the Editorial Board of the THWUGA, but not necessarily the opinions of individual editors.

THINGS YOU THOUGHT Letters to the Editor

There should be laws against outfit robers

Write to us: letters@thwuga.net

We welcome your letters in response to THWUGA content as well as topics relevant to campus. We will print letters on a timely and space-available basis.

Letters should not exceed 400 words and must not be written on any material other than paper. Napkins are acceptable but not preferred.

While we appreciate the creativity of play-dough representations, videos of interpretive dances, etc., these mediums are not easily manipulated into print format and will not be published. Pictures must be originals and not taken from coloring books.

Letters must be submitted by Tuesday in order to be printed in the following Friday’s issue. Include your full name, year (1st, 2nd, etc.) and major.

Bail for underage drinking arrests cuts into beer budget

Barbie Horton
8th-year Fashion History

Yes sir, this year they sent us a box of them flu vaccines just for our most special residents!

Jack Daniels
1st-year Animal Husbandry
Technology is just plain evil and dumb

According to my friend Mr. Spacey, in 2012 the world will end. It was Mr. Sandberg told me that will happen too, unless my good friend Mrs. Palin runs for president. That is, I think, a scary future.

My professor in typin class told me that the future is tech- nology. That means that technol- ogy is scary, and I think we should stop it.

Plus, in that Terminator movie the internet went up into the sky and took over the world and tried to kill us all. I have seen my friend from that personal school Tech on the internet before, and it looks real boring and nerdy, so I don't understand it, and my friend Mr. Beck from TV taught me that stuff I don't un- derstand is all evil and bad and nazi-communist, so internet is bad too.

As a side note, could some- one explain to me what a nazi- communist is?

See, the way I see it, it's only a matter of time until technol- ogy gets smarter than us. I figure my smartness is about to run wild on TV that the new-fangled Windows technology was already at level 7.

That's only 4 more levels until the Windows is smarter than me. Why do we even need smart windows? My win- dows are not smart, and they are just fine for looking out of and stuff. Even the windows at those other smart-folk schools seem fine. They work real well every time I throw a brick at them.

I also heard that our school has some technology resi- dents, like that engineering thing that they do at Tech. I do not think we will do that, since having engineering technology types around just means that there will be people to turn into cyborgs when the robots try to take over.

So, if we have people in the room with the computers when they attack, those people will all go first, so we should all stay at least two turnip fields away from computers all the time. Except on game day, then somebody should stay next to the computer to make sure the game clock works.

Our idea to let the game clock turn into a cyborg and run itself did not work well last week, maybe that's why those dumb kitty-cats beat us dawgs.

Cyborgs are the scariest part of the future. They are like people, but instead of hav- ing skin and eating possums and tippin' cows for fun, they covered in computers and eat brains and kill us all for fun.

Between the TV people on the internet doing the hulu- hoop and eating our brains and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Shoot, I have been so busy protecting my brain that I haven't even had time to use it. Fortunately, my friend Mr. Limbaugh told me I don't have to use my brain. He and Mr. Beck will tell me what to do so I don't have to use my brain to protect it from the evil technologies.

That's real good, because I can listen to them all day long on that news site on the inter- nets. I guess that technology, kinda, but it includes Beck's approval, then I guess it's ok.

We should at least control that dang technology to only be used to hear what we need to do for the day and stuff, while we protect our brains from slurping and the flying sky intruders.

We need to keep control- ling technology, not letting it control us. When clocks do stuff like tellin' us what time it is, or radios tell us what day of the week it is, that's just one more step towards the end of the world.

The technologies will get us, unless we get on first. That's why we have to keep don' stuff like turnin' the game clock off at the end of the game when we are losing. Because remember, if no-one takes a picture of a technology telling us we are losing, then we ain't losing.

On that note, we should destroy cameras, since they are gonna capture your soul, which is a lot like your brain. Let's all join together and shun those scary technologies.

Stupid Tebow's voodoo makes us badder

UGA is famous for one thing, their football program. We have always been titans of the SEC, athletes so strong that we didn't matter what we did against then Kentuckians, our football program. We have always been titans, the Dawgs are number one. Or at least that's what I was told.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.

So, in response to this world-wide anti-Dawgs plague that is taking over the great state of Georgia, I have a sug- gestion. Let's just do like the scoreboard guy does at the end of the games when we are losing. Instead of showing up on Saturday, let's just stay at home. Skip the football play- ing and get straight to the bar and the zombies that were running around campus a few weeks ago, I don't think I can protect my brain from any more technologies.

Who cares if our team lost for the fourth straight game? Hesitation doesn't mean that we are going to win. It just ain't possible with Tebow around bringing us all down.

This Paul Johnson guy they got at Tech sounds like he might be crazy like Tebow. He not only has options dit- ting the game, but three! That is just plain unacceptable. He just needs to pick. I know I can't handle three options, and the rest of our players certainly can't.
So I love being a Dawg as much as any other U[sic]GA fan, but sometimes I wish that they had mentioned all the bad stuff I needed to prepare for before getting here. Here’s the 10 things you should know so you don’t get all confused like I did.

1. S, E and C are not the only letters of the alphabet I need to memorize. It took me half an hour just to write this one sentence. I kept having to look back at my SparkCharts cheat sheet for the other 23 letters.

2. Beer pong is not a varsity sport. I spent four years in high school perfecting my beer pong skills, expecting to be a walk-on for the team. Turns out there ain’t one. I personally think it takes lots of skill to get a small ball in a small cup while drunk.

3. 22 is too old for the Athens bar scene. I started going to the bars downtown my freshman year, and even then I was one of the oldest people there. My senior year, I headed out with some friends only to discover that drinks were being served in baby bottles and sippy cups. Also, the “my-age-divided-by-two-plus-seven” rule didn’t really apply to half of the chicks at the bar.

4. Rifles are a firearm, and therefore aren’t allowed on campus. First off, what kind of college administration would take away our beloved Second Amendment rights? What if I needed to shoot a squirrel to get some late night grub? Or what if I wanted to shoot some skeet between classes? This blows.

5. “Donde esta la biblioteca?” actually has answer. I thought this was just some funny-sounding phrase that I learned in my Mexican class. I never thought that there actually was one of these “la biblioteca” things. Actually, we have four on campus...who knew? I don’t really go in them at all, except to use the pisser on gameday.

6. Big trucks won’t fit in regular parking spaces. I was used to driving my big truck into lots of different-sized and different-colored parking spaces at my high school. I was shocked to discover how all these parking spaces are the same. One size really doesn’t fit all.

7. Co-ed dorm rooms aren’t allowed. Dern housing people won’t let me room with any females, even if she’s only my half-sister. How’s a man supposed to be the alpha male if he has to share a room with another Dawg?

8. Beers are yummy

9. The Arch on campus is not actually McDonald’s. With all this talk about the “Arch” and its traditions at U[sic]GA, I was disappointed that they weren’t actually talking about McDonald’s, the most luxurious and gourmet eatery that I’ve ever been to. Instead I was served a super-sized dose of learnin’. I’m NOT lovin’ it.

10. You actually need a driver’s license to drive in Athens. I always thought that Athens was some magic fun zone where you didn’t need a license. I looked up to the football team and took after their example, which didn’t work out so well after all...
Enforcement of underage drinking laws causes recession

By Kandi Cotton
Monster Truck Afficionado

The U[sic]GA Parking Department began construction last week to meet demands for more available space, though not in the typical way.

Bombarded by a sea of demands, Parking has been forced to begin construction of a new garage that is equipped to handle the very large pick-up trucks that are so common on the Athens campus.

Bobby Joe, eighth-year poultry engineer and mud-tire aficionado, said, “It’s about time they recognized the needs of the student body. It was criminal how they expected us to get by with trucks when they didn’t even have a ladder to get into. I just don’t feel like a man if my tires aren’t bigger than whatever car I’m driving next to.”

Billy Bob, Joe’s second cousin and step-brother, agrees. “I just can’t believe how ill-equipped the campus is right now. Yesterday, I just stood by in horror as my little sister was told she couldn’t even chunk out of a tire while they’re eating. I mean, when you’re hungry, those things lookmighty tempting.”

At the time of press no unfortunate incidents had occurred between the school’s cheerleaders and the “big trucks” parked in the field.

It is believed that the truck owners are being given special treatment by the Parking office because they often heavily contribute to the school’s revenue by the monster truck rallies that they put on every year.

For these events Sanford Stadium is converted into a large monster truck rally show. The show regularly sells out and always proves to be a favorite for the Athens locals who often donate their “beater” cars from their front yards and to the competition for the “monster trucks” to perform their jumps over during the show.

Parking department erects garage in order to house ‘big trucks’

By Dina Sears
Professional Beer Taster

Incredibly low test scores and high pregnancy rates in the Athens area have left officials for the city searching for a solution.

Government officials identified underage drinking as the main source of the problem, forcing police to finally take action in fully enforcing the 21 and over drinking age.

Police sprang into action by patrolling every liquor store and fraternity in town, as well as forcing everyone over 21 to wear highly monitored wristbands in order to regulate drinking in fraternity houses.

Unfortunately, a crackdown on underage drinking laws has caused a dramatic downturn in the local Athens economy. Since the crackdown, 1,000 jobs have been cut, 500 small businesses (mostly liquor stores) have gone bankrupt and homeless rates have increased tenfold.

“We didn’t realize how much underage drinking was fueling our economy,” said Athens police officer Ophelia Pain.

It is presumed that any other town enforcing underage drinking laws would not have had this drastic result but, since Athens is mostly a college town, this crackdown started a huge economic spiral downward that can only be attributed to the fact that U[sic]GA is a huge party school.

Economists say the recession is not even close to being over in Athens; in fact, it will continue to get worse unless the drinking age goes back to being mostly unenforced. The city had remained mostly unaffected by the recent economic downturn that has plagued the rest of the nation up until the recent crackdown on the drinking age in Athens.

Additionally, depression rates among students have skyrocketed since the crackdown.

“We get hundreds of students a day, who are feeling incredibly lonely since most of their friends were only party friends, and now that they are forced to be sober they don’t have anything in common anymore,” said U[sic]GA psychiatrist Dr. Puma Pante.

Meanwhile, students and citizens of Athens alike have taken to the streets protesting this move by the Athens Police Department. Signs read from everything to “Give me alcohol or give me death” to “Drinking makes us happy.”

The strong public outcry and economic downturn has prompted police to reconsider their policies, but so far no changes have been made.

The city has petitioned the governor and alumnus, Sonny Purdue, to declare the city in a state of emergency.
To Hell with Georgia!
Hell with Georgia!
Student, confused with monkey, returned home

By Ima Jacket

Monkey Wrestler

Ian Azoo, third-year Animal Relations, is finally home safely after a two-week long manhunt was brought to a close following his surprising discovery in the baboon pit of the Metropolitan Atlanta Zoo. Azoo officials first sighted the naked man at 4 p.m. Friday, about three hours after his family reported him missing. Azoo’s communication with other primates through grunts, barks, and yells had kept the hairy Caucasian man as a rare albino pygmy monkey and he was kept at the zoo ever since before any suspicion was raised.

During his two week stay, Azoo delighted and shocked visitors with his antics, which ranged from his frequent attempts to urinate on zoo staff, to his penchant for knocking zoo patrons unconscious with coconuts.

“I remember one time he grabbed this little girl’s head and ate her glasses,” handler Jerry Church fondly recalls. “And then he ate her gameboy too. That’s when I knew he was special.”

Fellow keeper Joey Truth added “This one time he escaped and found the bottle of gin I hid in the back of my office. We later found him attempting to mate with our African Rhino, Becky. We actually thought we were viewing some incredible zoology research by seeing a monkey attempting to mate with a rhino, I guess it turns out he was just really drunk. What a riot.”

Azoo is reportedly doing well and is back home, but he is insistent that he live outside. The University of Georgia has awarded Azoo an honorary bachelor of science in Animal Relations.

State mandates special condom use to prevent reproducing

By Thomas Tank

Sexpert

The University Health Center at U[sic]GA will now receive a weekly order of 50,000 specially designed and reinforced condoms to prevent the alumni and student body from reproducing.

The announcement is due to a recent joint proposition by Georg- ias Department of Community Health, Education, Community Affairs and Public Safety. The Health Center is under state or- ders to completely distribute all condoms by the week’s end and before new order arrives.

That means that all 50,000 special condoms must be distrib- uted to the student body very quickly.

“Deciding is made due to a recent discovery by a group of Tech graduate students who undisputedly drew a direct relationship between U[sic]GA numerous acts of unprotected fornication and the decrease in the state’s rate of employment, at- tendance of higher education and public safety in the past decade.

However, the research found a positive correlation to the ris- ing birth rate of ‘buddog babies’ and the rise in smug (presumably due to the increase in big trucks), water pollution (presumably from the rise in chicken farms) and junkyards. The results were pre- sented to the State Departments listed above and direct measure where put into action right away.

“Athens’ revenues for the state from its University’s college tu- ition are too great for us to simply shut down the school all togeth- er,” said Willie Stroker, a repre- sentative from the Department of Community Affairs.

“We collectively believe that this is the best course of action to prevent further reproduction, which is the root of our problems, while obtaining our ultimate goals. It’ll be a slow and painful process but we believe it is for the betterment of the state in the long run,” Stroker said.

Because of this rather drastic measure, U[sic]GA will undergo a series of alterations both on its campus and in its staff composi- tion in the upcoming semester.

A special sub-branch will now be introduced to the University Health Center, named Dawg Wrappers, solely for the purpose of distributing the weekly order of condoms to specific locations on campus. Fraternities and sorori- ties are the primary targets for the condom allocation, with certain dorms also added to the list.

Because of the large number of condoms that will have to dis- posed of weekly, a new system had to be devised to make sure the de- vices were properly disposed of.

As a result, Sanford Stadium will be remodeled into a high-tech advanced structure dedicated to disposing these condoms. U[sic] GA’s students will bring their used condoms in at the end of the week so the condom disposal com- mittee can bury them deeply under the campus grounds using its high-tech con- dom burying tech- nology.

“Not only did we a void hav- in g r e c t i o n t o r e - move the school al- together but, the proposed plan even allows for more employ- ment opportunities as both the Dawg Wrap- pers and the newly remod- eled Sanford Stadium require more personnel to attend and construct, respectively,” said Tom Karr, another representative from the Department of Community Affairs.

“It’s really a win-win situa- tion,” Karr said.

Due to the large quan- tities of condoms needed and the limited re- source of materials, the specially rein- forced condoms will have to be modi- fi ed from al ready ex isti ng condoms around the State. It was unani- mously decided by the Department of Health that these shortages would be held by shipments from less dangerous target groups, like pris- ons.

Animal spelling problems causes embarrassment to students

By Anita Hug

Oral Reporter

This fall the English and Jour- nalism departments at the Univer- sity [sic] of Georgia have noticed an alarming trend—students and fans of the school seem to be re- gressing in what is historically one of their highest nationally rank- ing majors: remedial spelling of animal names. The most recent spelling embarrassment for the student body came in a Facebook event page promoting fan atten- dance for U[sic]GA’s game against the University of South Carolina Gamecocks. The tagline read, “Come watch our Dawgs beat the Gamecocks.”

Even Philadelphia Eagles back- up quarterback and UGA fan, Mark Vick, took the tagline spelling challenge.

“They really need to get their spelling together,” said Vick, “Other than that, I don’t really see any problem with it. It actually sounded pretty good to me.”

While it has long been a U[sic] GA tradition to struggle in aca- demic fields, a recent study shows that U[sic]GA is seeing more and more students who truly believe the word ‘dog’ is spelled ‘d-a-w-g.’

“But the truly concerning problem is that students and fans alike are starting to apply the same incorrect spelling to other everyday animals,” said Professor Drew Peacock, who was in charge of study. Peacock has found it particularly frustrating that an increasing number of his own stu- dents have begun misspelling his own name on papers and texts.

“On a number of occasions this semester I’ve had to reiterate to my class. My name is Professor DREW PEACOCK, not DREW PEACAWCK,” Peacock said. According to the study, roughly 72% of incoming freshman stu- dents are having trouble spelling elementary animal names. That same statistic rises to 87% for graduating seniors.

Another English Professor, Mike Hawk, who teaches intro- ductory animal spellings, has ex- perienced similar problems in his classroom as of late.

The name ‘Mike Hawk’ is a tricky one. It is spelled H-A-W-K?” said Hugh Jass, a first-year Animal Spelling major.

U[sic]GA has been taking some proactive steps in the mat- ter. Along with providing animal sound wheels (the kind that play correct sounds and spellings of animals) to students, the admin- istration has taken steps to work with the faculty to help correct this problem.

“We’ve been putting a lot of pres- sure on Professor Hawk lately. Hopefully we’ve already hit the climax of the problem and all of our hard work and effort will pay off,” said English Department Chair Payne N. Diaz.

The English and Journalism departments at U[sic]GA are experiencing a difficult time training their students to correctly spell many animal names. The word “dawg” from “dog” is especially a problem for knocking zoo patrons uncon- scious with coconuts.

“I remember one time he grabbed this little girl’s head and ate her glasses,” handler Jerry Church fondly recalls. “And then he ate her gameboy too. That’s when I knew he was special.”

Fellow keeper Joey Truth added “This one time he escaped and found the bottle of gin I hid in the back of my office. We later found him attempting to mate with our African Rhino, Becky. We actual- ly thought we were viewing some incredible zoology research by seeing a monkey attempting to mate with a rhino, I guess it turns out he was just really drunk. What a riot.”

Azoo is reportedly doing well and is back home, but he is insis- tent that he live outside. The Uni- versity of Georgia has awarded Azoo an honorary bachelor of science in Animal Relations.

Ian Azoo has been returned to his home after he was mistaken for a rare albino pygmy monkey in the Atlanta Zoo. Azoo stayed in a cage with the baboons for two weeks until he was spotted.
Sesame Street performs for die-hard students, fans go wild

The premiers of the newest seasons of VH1’s increasingly popular Tool Academy and Rock of Love are approaching quickly and filming is underway.

Interestingly enough, we found that U[sic]GA’s football team comprises the entire cast of Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash is U[sic]GA sorority Chi Chi Chi (XXX).

This season on Tool Academy, the contestants will be put through a variety of relationship-building challenges, including confederate flag weaving, mud-digging and keg stands. Rock of Love: Trailer Trash will be comprised of the Tri-Chis attempting to “win the heart” of rock star Bret Michaels by exposing skin.

We had the opportunity to sit in on the filming for Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash and interview the some of the contestants.

“Usually, our shows are scripted so that the ‘tools’ only appear to be huge tools and our Bret Michaels girls pretend to be in love with him and be dirty, but for this show we’ll be able to film them in their natural state. Most of the football team already torments their girlfriends and our Tri-Chi girls would probably try sleeping with anything that breathes, so our job this season will be much easier than in the past,” said Jason Cruz, casting director for both Tool Academy and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash.

Comedians refuse to appear at U[sic]GA

The National Comedy Association (NCA) has put U[sic]GA on their black list for comedians having to explain jokes to the audience.

According to the NCA, the reason for putting U[sic]GA on the blacklist is due to the extra work and effort required for comedians to perform at U[sic]GA.

“This is something that we’ve been considering for a long time. Every time we have done a show at U[sic]GA, we have to add on an hour to the show’s length in order to explain the jokes. The humor just seems to go over students’ heads,” said Blaine Cook, the president of the NCA. “Our comedians are passionate about telling jokes, not explaining them.”

By Luke Atmadik
Editor of Partyin Times

The premieres of the newest seasons of VH1’s increasingly popular Tool Academy and Rock of Love are approaching quickly and filming is underway.

Reality TV: U[sic]GA students overrun VH1 shows

Interestingly enough, we found that U[sic]GA’s football team comprises the entire cast of Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash is U[sic]GA sorority Chi Chi Chi (XXX).

This season on Tool Academy, the contestants will be put through a variety of relationship-building challenges, including confederate flag weaving, mud-digging and keg stands. Rock of Love: Trailer Trash will be comprised of the Tri-Chis attempting to “win the heart” of rock star Bret Michaels by exposing skin.

We had the opportunity to sit in on the filming for Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash and interview the some of the contestants.

“Usually, our shows are scripted so that the ‘tools’ only appear to be huge tools and our Bret Michaels girls pretend to be in love with him and be dirty, but for this show we’ll be able to film them in their natural state. Most of the football team already torments their girlfriends and our Tri-Chi girls would probably try sleeping with anything that breathes, so our job this season will be much easier than in the past,” said Jason Cruz, casting director for both Tool Academy and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash.

Comedians refuse to appear at U[sic]GA

The National Comedy Association (NCA) has put U[sic]GA on their black list for comedians having to explain jokes to the audience.

According to the NCA, the reason for putting U[sic]GA on the blacklist is due to the extra work and effort required for comedians to perform at U[sic]GA.

“This is something that we’ve been considering for a long time. Every time we have done a show at U[sic]GA, we have to add on an hour to the show’s length in order to explain the jokes. The humor just seems to go over students’ heads,” said Blaine Cook, the president of the NCA. “Our comedians are passionate about telling jokes, not explaining them.”

By Luke Atmadik
Editor of Partyin Times

The premieres of the newest seasons of VH1’s increasingly popular Tool Academy and Rock of Love are approaching quickly and filming is underway.

Reality TV: U[sic]GA students overrun VH1 shows

Interestingly enough, we found that U[sic]GA’s football team comprises the entire cast of Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash is U[sic]GA sorority Chi Chi Chi (XXX).

This season on Tool Academy, the contestants will be put through a variety of relationship-building challenges, including confederate flag weaving, mud-digging and keg stands. Rock of Love: Trailer Trash will be comprised of the Tri-Chis attempting to “win the heart” of rock star Bret Michaels by exposing skin.

We had the opportunity to sit in on the filming for Tool Academy 3 and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash and interview the some of the contestants.

“Usually, our shows are scripted so that the ‘tools’ only appear to be huge tools and our Bret Michaels girls pretend to be in love with him and be dirty, but for this show we’ll be able to film them in their natural state. Most of the football team already torments their girlfriends and our Tri-Chi girls would probably try sleeping with anything that breathes, so our job this season will be much easier than in the past,” said Jason Cruz, casting director for both Tool Academy and Rock of Love: Trailer Trash.

Comedians refuse to appear at U[sic]GA

The National Comedy Association (NCA) has put U[sic]GA on their black list for comedians having to explain jokes to the audience.

According to the NCA, the reason for putting U[sic]GA on the blacklist is due to the extra work and effort required for comedians to perform at U[sic]GA.

“This is something that we’ve been considering for a long time. Every time we have done a show at U[sic]GA, we have to add on an hour to the show’s length in order to explain the jokes. The humor just seems to go over students’ heads,” said Blaine Cook, the president of the NCA. “Our comedians are passionate about telling jokes, not explaining them.”
THWUGAMES

One of these pictures is a square and one is not. Which one is the square?

A

B

SUDOKU

Fill in the grid so that every row and column contains the digits 1 through 2.

1 2

1

Part of this drawing has been cleverly left out. Can you guess the animal in the incomplete picture?

Tic Tac Toe Challenge

You are “X”. Can you finish the puzzle to win?

X O X

O O

X O X

Advanced Puzzle

Cut out the pieces and see if you can figure out how to put it together. Good Luck!

Attn: Student Organizations

This space could be your ad for only $36

nique.net/ads

Georgia Tech Graduate Technical Symposium

8th Annual [GT]^2 Symposium

FOCUSing on the GLOBAL Impact: Science and Engineering Changing the World

Symposium Highlights

Over $3000 in Prizes Money

Network with a variety of Corporate Sponsors

Keynote Speaker Guion Bluford – 1st Black Astronaut

Please Register at: www.gtsquared.gatech.edu
Wrong scholarship winner given crown

By Ivanna Tinkle

Head of Bathroom Duty

This year’s U[sic]GA’s Aesthetically Based Scholarship Competition was rocked with controversy when the judges didn’t realize that the wrong girl had been awarded the crown.

“The room was filled with mirrors, and I thought I was receiving the crown, sax and bouquet,” said Anita Knapp, a third-year Cosmetology Engineering major and the true winner of the competition.

“When I realized there was no crown on my head, I looked across the stage and saw a girl who looked just like me wearing my title,” the judges claim that they kept track of the 50 girls in the pageant based on whose hair was up and whose hair was down.

“All the contestants wore their hair down during the swimsuit portion of the competition so we lost track of who was who,” said Dusty Rhodes, a graduate Female Anatomy major and one of the judges of the competition.

The Student Government Association (SGA) led an investigation on the physical homogeneity of the U[sic]GA’s female population following this controversy.

“We tried to interview women around campus about their thoughts of this homogeneity,” said SGA’s VP of Smartness Stupid. “However, we lost track of how many girls we were interested in later realizing that we had been interviewing the same girl all day.”

While scientific studies show that occasionally physically identical people will occur in the form of identical twins, 94% of U[sic]GA’s female population is between 5’4” and 5’7”, has blonde hair, blue eyes and at least one form of plastic surgery.

Several weeks after the pageant controversy, SGA discovered an underground network of makeup artists and plastic surgeons that train the U[sic]GA’s female population several weeks before the beginning of school.

This underground network was initially installed to prepare women going through formal recruitment. However, business continued when U[sic]GA’s females discovered how easy it became to steal each other’s boyfriends when they all practiced the same two-hour hair and make-up ritual.

Statistics compiled by the NCA showed that during a typical comedy performance at U[sic]GA, there is an average of five minutes of silence following each punchline before laughter commences.

“The audience really makes the performance. When the audience is really thick-headed, the performance just becomes a set of awkward silences. I don’t know if it’s due to alcohol killing their brain cells, but obviously U[sic]GA students don’t have enough to understand a simple joke,” Cook said.

Members of the programming board have still expressed their confusion regarding the entire situation.

“We still don’t get it. Maybe if someone could explain this to us again in simpler words, then we could understand,” said Jess Dumbo, president of the programming board.

Wrong scholarship winner given crown

Palin’s Rogue too long, wordy

By Angie O’Plasty

Medical Expert

As a proud conservative and adamant supporter of John McCain and Sarah Palin during the 2008 presidential elections, I must say that I am thoroughly disappointed with Palin’s new book, Going Rogue.

The autobiography, with all its hype, fell short of my expectations and the expectations of thousands of students who were looking forward to a fun and exciting read about an exciting woman. I showed up to Barnes and Noble for the midnight release party and participated in Palin trivia and folding games for six hours until I could get my book. During trivia, I was able to correctly answer that Levi Johnston, Palin’s granddaughter-daddy who posed nude in Playboy a few days ago, actually has an eight-pack instead of a six-pack.

I won a free copy of the book for knowledge on Palin family drama.

Once the book was in my hand, I quickly flipped through the pages and was dismayed to find a lack of colored pictures. My eyes were greeted by pages and pages of text, and I could feel my eyes begin to water and burn.

I began to feel dizzy and slammed the book shut when I was reminded by a fellow U[sic]GA student that reading can cause brain cancer.

Nevertheless, I decided to risk cancer and read the book. Once again, I was disappointed. From the title, Going Rogue, I was led to believe that a certain X-Men character would grace the plot of Palin’s life. Rogue, however, was conspicuously absent from all 400 pages.

To all those thinking of buying this book, save yourself from the brain cancer you might get. It’s not worth it. I give this book two paws down.

We were shown a clip of the first episode when the team was told that the show is actually Tool Academy. Since the football team is during the cheerleading squad, they thought that the arrival of their girlfriends was all part of the show America’s Best Football Team. Tune in to these exciting new seasons to find out if the football team ever figures out what show they’re filming and which one of the Tri-Chis ends up with Bret Michaels.

By Ivanna Tinkle

Head of Bathroom Duty

This year’s U[sic]GA’s Aesthetically Based Scholarship Competition was rocked with controversy when the judges didn’t realize that the wrong girl had been awarded the crown.

“The room was filled with mirrors, and I thought I was receiving the crown, sax and bouquet,” said Anita Knapp, a third-year Cosmetology Engineering major and the true winner of the competition.

“When I realized there was no crown on my head, I looked across the stage and saw a girl who looked just like me wearing my title.”

The judges claim that they kept track of the 50 girls in the pageant based on whose hair was up and whose hair was down.

“All the contestants wore their hair down during the swimsuit portion of the competition so we lost track of who was who,” said Dusty Rhodes, a graduate Female Anatomy major and one of the judges of the competition.

The Student Government Association (SGA) led an investigation on the physical homogeneity of the U[sic]GA’s female population following this controversy.

“We tried to interview women around campus about their thoughts of this homogeneity,” said SGA’s VP of Smartness Stupid. “However, we lost track of how many girls we’d interviewed and later realized that we had been interviewing the same girl all day.”

While scientific studies show that occasionally physically identical people will occur in the form of identical twins, 94% of U[sic]GA’s female population is between 5’4” and 5’7”, has blonde hair, blue eyes and at least one form of plastic surgery.

Several weeks after the pageant controversy, SGA discovered an underground network of makeup artists and plastic surgeons that train the U[sic]GA’s female population several weeks before the beginning of school.

This underground network was initially installed to prepare women going through formal recruitment. However, business continued when U[sic]GA’s females discovered how easy it became to steal each other’s boyfriends when they all practiced the same two-hour hair and make-up ritual.

Statistics compiled by the NCA showed that during a typical comedy performance at U[sic]GA, there is an average of five minutes of silence following each punchline before laughter commences.

“The audience really makes the performance. When the audience is really thick-headed, the performance just becomes a set of awkward silences. I don’t know if it’s due to alcohol killing their brain cells, but obviously U[sic]GA students don’t have enough to understand a simple joke,” Cook said.

Members of the programming board have still expressed their confusion regarding the entire situation.

“We still don’t get it. Maybe if someone could explain this to us again in simpler words, then we could understand,” said Jess Dumbo, president of the programming board.

Wrong scholarship winner given crown

Palin’s Rogue too long, wordy

By Angie O’Plasty

Medical Expert

As a proud conservative and adamant supporter of John McCain and Sarah Palin during the 2008 presidential elections, I must say that I am thoroughly disappointed with Palin’s new book, Going Rogue.

The autobiography, with all its hype, fell short of my expectations and the expectations of thousands of students who were looking forward to a fun and exciting read about an exciting woman. I showed up to Barnes and Noble for the midnight release party and participated in Palin trivia and folding games for six hours until I could get my book. During trivia, I was able to correctly answer that Levi Johnston, Palin’s granddaughter-daddy who posed nude in Playboy a few days ago, actually has an eight-pack instead of a six-pack.

I won a free copy of the book for knowledge on Palin family drama.

Once the book was in my hand, I quickly flipped through the pages and was dismayed to find a lack of colored pictures. My eyes were greeted by pages and pages of text, and I could feel my eyes begin to water and burn.

I began to feel dizzy and slammed the book shut when I was reminded by a fellow U[sic]GA student that reading can cause brain cancer.

Nevertheless, I decided to risk cancer and read the book. Once again, I was disappointed. From the title, Going Rogue, I was led to believe that a certain X-Men character would grace the plot of Palin’s life. Rogue, however, was conspicuously absent from all 400 pages.

To all those thinking of buying this book, save yourself from the brain cancer you might get. It’s not worth it. I give this book two paws down.

We were shown a clip of the first episode when the team was told that the show is actually Tool Academy. Since the football team is during the cheerleading squad, they thought that the arrival of their girlfriends was all part of the show America’s Best Football Team. Tune in to these exciting new seasons to find out if the football team ever figures out what show they’re filming and which one of the Tri-Chis ends up with Bret Michaels.
Cox confused by name-based humor

By Mike Sweeney

Cox comes through in the clutch

U[sic]GA fifth-year senior quarterback Joe Cox doesn’t understand why people think his name is so funny. People close to the football player said, “He just doesn’t get it when we try to explain it to him,” said Cox’s roommate and close friend, Jack Hoff. “The joke is completely over his head.”

According to several of Cox’s friends and acquaintances, the quarterback doesn’t understand why people laugh at his name.

“When people bring it up, it really seems to get him throbbing mad,” another source said. “And there is nothing worse than a red, angry, Cox waving around in your face, ready to blow.”

Flint McGee, a third-year Turf Management student, tried helping Cox make the connection to no avail. “I saw the look in his eyes and I realized it was just beyond him. There was just no way it was going to happen,” McGee said.

The incidents have served as a firm, pulsing reminder of the dangers of humor around the functionally illiterate.

“It’s gotten to the point now where we won’t talk about it,” one teammate said. “If anyone brings it to attention, we have to deal with [Joe] Cox getting in our face. I don’t know what the team will do if Cox explodes on us one more time.”

Another teammate added: “The sooner we move on, the sooner we can get this behind us and go back to playing football, or at least tryin’.”

Phone calls and e-mails to Cox were not returned, but friends worry that his recent struggles against mediocre competition will result in even more jokes.

New ticketing policy empties stands

By Uga Lee

Transfer student

Georgia fan attendance plummeted at last weekend’s football game against Kentucky after a ticketing snafu only allowed actual U[sic]GA students and alumni to attend the game.

It is believed that the U[sic]GA athletic department was up that, as a result of Georgia’s poor performance on the field this season, thousands of seats went unused to U[sic]GA fans for the Auburn game the week before and were subsequently purchased by Auburn fans.

The department’s ticket master, Cletus Hicks, believed it would be better to allocate the tickets for the Kentucky game to the people that they knew would be “real” Georgia fans.

Hicks instituted a new system restricting entry to only students with valid U[sic]GA ID cards or alumni with valid Charmin-based diplomas. In the process, he forgot that the majority of game-day seats are filled by people who never attended the university.

“I guess I just got so upset about all them darn Tiger fans being around here and I thought to myself, ‘Cletus, why don’t you just give the tickets to you know who will be real Dawg fans?’ I guess I forgot that most of our fans didn’t actually graduate,” Hicks said.

The stands in the designated Georgia areas were near empty with the exception of the student section. However, many in the student section could not be counted as present because they were not considered conscious.

Despite the lack of tickets to the game, thousands of U[sic]GA fans from other schools still came and tailgated for their usual day-long menagerie of mullet contests, bobbing for pig feet and mother-daughter Jell-O wrestling.

“I was really upset when I learned I couldn’t get into the game,” said Billy Bob Busch, a Kennesaw State student, who was already confused about his personal identity, cannot attend Georgia games under the new ticket policy.

“This has taught us the importance of our trusted fair-weather fans,” Hicks said.

As a result of the ticketing problem the city of Athens experienced a drastic decrease in revenue because of the lack of beer sales in the area.

Beer sales, especially Keystone Light sales, support the majority of the city’s functions. The lack in revenue means that the city may not be able to put on as many tractor pull events this year.

One of Joe Cox’s few remaining fans shows support for the quarterback, Cox himself was oblivious to the double-edged nature of the comment.

New ticketing policy empties stands

By Uga Lee

Transfer student

Georgia fan attendance plummeted at last weekend’s football game against Kentucky after a ticketing snafu only allowed actual U[sic]GA students and alumni to attend the game.

It is believed that the U[sic]GA athletic department was up that, as a result of Georgia’s poor performance on the field this season, thousands of seats went unused to U[sic]GA fans for the Auburn game the week before and were subsequently purchased by Auburn fans.

The department’s ticket master, Cletus Hicks, believed it would be better to allocate the tickets for the Kentucky game to the people that they knew would be “real” Georgia fans.

Hicks instituted a new system restricting entry to only students with valid U[sic]GA ID cards or alumni with valid Charmin-based diplomas. In the process, he forgot that the majority of game-day seats are filled by people who never attended the university.

“I guess I just got so upset about all them darn Tiger fans being around here and I thought to myself, ‘Cletus, why don’t you just give the tickets to you know who will be real Dawg fans?’ I guess I forgot that most of our fans didn’t actually graduate,” Hicks said.

The stands in the designated Georgia areas were near empty with the exception of the student section. However, many in the student section could not be counted as present because they were not considered conscious.

Despite the lack of tickets to the game, thousands of U[sic]GA fans from other schools still came and tailgated for their usual day-long menagerie of mullet contests, bobbing for pig feet and mother-daughter Jell-O wrestling.

“I was really upset when I learned I couldn’t get into the game,” said Billy Bob Busch, a Kennesaw State student, who was already confused about his personal identity, cannot attend Georgia games under the new ticket policy.

“This has taught us the importance of our trusted fair-weather fans,” Hicks said.

As a result of the ticketing problem the city of Athens experienced a drastic decrease in revenue because of the lack of beer sales in the area.

Beer sales, especially Keystone Light sales, support the majority of the city’s functions. The lack in revenue means that the city may not be able to put on as many tractor pull events this year.

You can do better than using failing logic and incorrect facts to insult SGA. Yes, there may be problems, but there are much worse culprits of incompetence – try housing or parking or…

NY Times Article "Georgia Tech’s Bedford Makes Time for Spread Option and D’Alembert’s Paradox “

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

Get the tickets to you know who

Anu Pillai
Apoorv Sinha
Christian Bockhop
Michael Chen
Mike Donohue
Matt Hanlon
Jeff Ye
Ravi Patel
Sarah Vaden

The Honor Advisory Council provides information concerning the Honor Code, counsels students wishing to report honor violations, and assists students accused of an honor violation. Honor Advisors maintain awareness of the Honor Code and promote an ethical environment at Georgia Tech. More about the Honor Code and the Honor Advisory Council can be found at www.honor.gatech.edu

Congratulations
New Honor Advisors

www.nique.net

sliver

to the guys studying awesome ‘hard’ calculus and discussing how they keep their roommates out of their room during sex by writing ‘predicted end time’ on the door: NO ONE CARES. YOU ARE NO PIMP!

4th Floor 8th St E. I am going to come over there and shove your laser pointer up your @$$ professors dont give a damn about dead week

I’ve seen this girl all over campus at random places, and I want to know her, she is gorgeous!

I don’t even know your name…

not all red heads at tech are ugly…

open your eyes.

girl who asks stupid questions in social psych: i hate you.

To guy in red car: Sorry I pulled out in front of you on my bike.

I may have still been drunk from the night before and I may have...

ARE NO PIMP!

Getting stoned means two completely different things depending on what time period you’re from.

Without me, everything is just aweso.

I dread locks.

GT Parking is an absolute joke. I’m now paying to park at a meter AND paying a ticket because you aren’t competent enough to maintain your equipment. I now want to be a d-bag Alum just so...

GT Parking is an absolute joke. I’m now paying to park at a meter AND paying a ticket because you aren’t competent enough to maintain your equipment. I now want to be a d-bag Alum just so...

Bartering was still the major method of monetary transfer

Why should the Board of Regents care about increasing student fees? Bartering was still the major method of monetary transfer

GT Parking is an absolute joke. I’m now paying to park at a meter AND paying a ticket because you aren’t competent enough to maintain your equipment. I now want to be a d-bag Alum just so...

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

without me, everything is just aweso.

I dread locks.

GT Parking is an absolute joke. I’m now paying to park at a meter AND paying a ticket because you aren’t competent enough to maintain your equipment. I now want to be a d-bag Alum just so...

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

THE TECHNIQUE IS TECHNOLOGIC- J-LAW

we gotta start making classes easier or no one will want to come
“Tackling dummy” drill leads to brawl, shuts down practice

By Chuck Myseck

Dummy-in-chief

U[sic]GA football head coach Mark Richt and defensive coordinator Willie Martinez had to stop football practice last week after several dozen defensive players were injured in a common tackling dummy drill.

The incident occurred after Martinez had the first- and second-string defensive units line up in front of the dummies.

“I just told them to ‘tackle the dummies.’ Nothing really out of the ordinary,” Martinez said.

When the drill began, all of the defensive players on the field simultaneously started tackling each other. Some also ran across the field and tried to bring down running backs conducting a separate offensive drill.

“We run this drill to help them simulate a game. As soon as I blew my whistle, they lunged towards each other,” Martinez said.

Many of the U[sic]GA players explained that they were confused by the instructions.

“Everyone in the media kept talking about how tackle dummies would have done a better job than we have, so I got scared at facing the real talent. We have to work our way to that level,” said junior nose tackle Imma Eatu.

Martinez watched from the top of the sled as they each fruitlessly attempted to wrestle each other to the ground.

“It was like watching animals fight in the wild. They ram each other a lot but nothing really happens,” Martinez said.

Martinez and Richt attempted to rectify the situation the next day by placing signs labeled “HIT ME” on the dummies.

Unfortunately, the signs caused even more confusion when the players just stared while trying to read the characters on the papers.

The next day Richt replaced the original signs with pictures of their cousins. The players started tackling and lunging toward the dummies immediately.

“Tackling dummy” drill leads to brawl, shuts down practice

Grazing from page 16

between the turf and real grass.

“It’s such a problem just starting that now we have to officially block off all entrances of the stadium,” Wieser said.

“It’s a good thing we’re not playing any more games for the rest of the year, because that field has some intense damage on it. It won’t be easy to repair.”

There have been efforts to calm disgruntled fans and alumni who are wary of the break from tradition in replacing the grass. Many consider changing the surface to be sacrilege.

“The new turf will be painted black. There will also be free eye protection kits handed out during games and when we play Florida again in Jacksonville. We will also be placing pots of chocolate gold around Sanford Stadium. Hopefully, the shiny and edible trinkets will be able to distract them long enough until the season is over,” Wieser said.

Officials are having a difficult time finding those responsible for the field damage. “We’ve tried reprimanding the cheerleaders responsible for the acts, but the problem is that we can’t seem to tell any of them apart,” said Ima Doubledee, cheerleading coach and director. “It’ll take at least two years before we’re able to separate who from who and figure out who the real culprits are.”

While the field is being replaced, the doors leading to the field will still be chained and locked starting Wednesday.

A decision on what to do with the stadium’s famous hedges has not yet been issued.

Athletic department officials have expressed interest in replacing the hedges with artificial replicas, concerned that the cheerleaders would simply begin munching on the hedges after the Astroturf is installed.
U[sic]GA accepts bid to inaugural Toilet Bowl

By the numbers

5
Number of games the football team has lost this season. U[sic]GA has lost to Oklahoma State, LSU, Tennessee, Florida and Kentucky.

94
The number of penalties committed by the Bulldogs this season, putting them at No. 4 in the nation.

26
Number of turnovers lost by the Bulldogs this season, which has them tied for No. 11 in the nation.

50
Jersey number of Kentucky line-backer Sam Maxwell, who made the game-winning interception on Saturday.

2.5
Projected Nielsen rating for the telecast of this season's Roto Rooter Toilet Bowl on Dec. 28, approximately the same as the ratings traditionally received by programs such as Nickelodeon's Spongebob Squarepants.

Sanford Stadium adopts Astroturf field to prevent grazing

By Beau Vine

Not eating more chicken

Starting Wednesday, the U[sic]GA Athletic Association (AAA) will be closing Sanford Stadium in order to replace the grass on the field with turf.

According to Facilities Director Bud Wiser, the move comes after Monday's post-game facilities reviews showed damage beyond repair on the field.

A further look into the cause of the damage revealed also that the damage was not induced by natural causes from football games; rather, it was due to the problem of overgrazing by the U[sic]GA cheerleading squad.

"We've been having difficulties with our cheerleaders getting hungry at halftime. They have to cheer so dawg-gone hard to encourage our fan base. Imagine trying to raise enthusiasm for our football team. Good grief, it's probably harder than finding a fairly officiated game in the SEC," said Michael Hunt, an athletic department official.

"We've tried discouraging this behavior but apparently they saw someone from The Hills doing it so now they won't listen to what anyone says," Hunt said.

In response to the cases of grazing, the U[sic]GA Spirit Team is investigating into various reasons as to why the cheerleaders have begun to graze the field. Some Spirit Team coordinators believe that the grazing is due to depression-induced eating following U[sic]GA's lackluster football season.

"It's just been so hard, and we get so hungry out on the field for that long, and just to watch it happen. I just want to find the nearest thing I can eat and grass happens to be it!" said Candi Dooit, captain of the cheerleading squad.

I don't blame the girls for doing it! I blame it on myself! It's just so hard to keep a strong face when all you want to do is stuff grass in your mouth," said trainer Bo Tocks.

Wiser believes that once the grass is replaced and the turf is put in, the cases of grazing cheerleaders should decrease. However as of Monday when facilities workers began placing turf on the sidelines, some workers had to shoo away cheerleaders who were gnawing unknowingly at the newly placed turf.

According to witnesses on hand, the cheerleaders could barely tell the difference between grass and turf.

See Grazing, page 15