FRATERNITIES:

The Greeks — the subject of one of the biggest controversies on campus since grass, are accused of being rich snobs, having no independence, being dumb jocks, and basically acting like immature animals. Sure, Greek systems have virtually stopped growing and started to decline across the country. Yet, at Tech they continue to grow, new fraternities being formed in recent years.

Yes, for the Greek at Georgia Tech there are many descriptions: for every rich one there is one that struggles to meet his debts, for every obnoxious one there is a reserved individual — not unlikely a brother of the same fraternity. This is what our system is all about — people, possibly with different characteristics and from different ways of life, working, partying, studying and living together — attempting to live life to the fullest.

The famous plastic smiles, so characteristic of rush, have disappeared with the installation of year-round rush. The rushee no longer sees sixty completely stereotyped people, he sees brotherhood — not a myth, but friendship with a deep feeling of responsibility. The Greek way of life, like everything else that is expressive and involved, occasionally receives criticism. Nevertheless, the tradition established by the Greeks at Georgia Tech is a testimony to their viability and value.
