We're all pulling to attract new business to Georgia. But to remain a strong contender, we must assure those companies that there will be plenty of electricity to go around. Or they will go elsewhere. Along with the extra jobs, the extra paychecks, and the boost to Georgia's economy. That's why we're determined to make sure our electricity supply continues to be one of this state's most powerful attractions.

As computer systems multiply, so do the problems of sharing information among the people who use them.

Each system has its own operating software, its own way of representing data. And its own way of communicating this data to the outside world. And as systems change to keep up with technological advances, the more users must struggle just to keep up.

But one computer company can bring all your users together. No matter how many vendors you're using.

At Digital, the ability to network computers is the cornerstone of our entire computing strategy. No wonder, then, that a Digital network can communicate with IBM mainframes and personal computers better than IBM can. Your users can exchange memos, mail, and documents directly. With no slowdowns from having to go through an intermediate computer.

And because we're planned for change, we can help you plan for it, too. You can upgrade to the latest, most cost-effective technology simply by plugging in new equipment. Without bringing down the network you already have. Without disrupting your entire organization.

Perhaps that's why our customers have made our Ethernet networks the most widely installed in the world—with over a half million users. For more than a decade, Digital's networks have been connecting the front office, the factory floor, the engineering center and the MIS department. And today, they're bringing entire companies together on a complete range of VAX® desktop, departmental and large-scale computers.

Let us show you a Digital network in action at a company near you. Or at one of our Application Centers for Technology. Just call your local Digital sales office or write: Digital Equipment Corporation, 200 Baker Avenue, West Concord, MA 01779. digital
